The Trump campaign wanted the message Tuesday to be all about public safety. It got that, but in an unexpected way.

Tuesday's theme, announced the week before the Republican National Convention, was "Make America Safe Once Again." While the five hours of speeches inside Fiserv Forum centered on that theme, whether touting support for law enforcement or claims about getting rid of fentanyl, what happened outside carried the day locally.

Five Columbus, Ohio police officers in Milwaukee to guard the convention shot and killed a Milwaukee resident with two knives more than a half mile from the downtown security perimeter. Police Chief Jeffrey Norman defended their actions, but also said the city was evaluating its practices involving the thousands of outside officers.

Donald Trump again appeared at the convention, but didn't speak. Trump arrived around 8 p.m., taking a seat next to running mate JD Vance and several others. Spotted with him in the "Make America Great Once Again" booth was Congressman Steve Scalise, a victim in a 2017 politically motivated shooting, as well as Sen. Tom Cotton, Congresswoman Marjorie Taylor Greene and campaign manager Corey Lewandowski.

Safety also included plenty of mentions of Trump's assassination attempt and universal school choice, though nothing we caught about school shootings.

Vance is expected to speak Wednesday and Trump Thursday. Tuesday's headliners were Dr. Ben Carson, Trump's former head of housing and a doctor who has a public school named after him in Milwaukee, Sarah Huckabee Sanders, the Trump press secretary turned Arkansas governor, Florida Senator Marco Rubio and Lara Trump, the candidate's daughter-in-law.

Milwaukee finally got some serious love from the stage. "Milwaukee is a world-class city, and Wisconsinites are some of the kindest people you'll ever meet," said former Trump chief of staff and nonpartisan host committee chair Reince Priebus. Even if it had to come from a Wisconsinite, we'll take it.

Republican Senate candidate Eric Hovde also spoke, touching on public safety and his most frequent topic, his opponent Tammy Baldwin. He also attacked the media.

Wednesday's theme is Make America Strong Once Again.
